For example, last summer EPA announced plans to suspend the use of Chlordane and Heptachlor, chemicals used by farmers to protect corn, grain, peanuts, citrus and other crops from a wide variety of insects, and hearings were convened in Washington. While Train reversed the Judge's decision, he exempted from suspension the use of Chlor dane to control the White Fringed Beetle on peanuts in eight Southern states and for several other agricultural uses. Unfortunately, the use of these chemicals was suspended for control of household, garden, lawn and turf pests. Train's decision is being challenged in the courts Fund which wants the ban to be complete and the manufact. wants the partial ban lifted. Nevertheless, it appears we have won a significant victory for our farmers and ulately for the consumer. However, Congress will probably have to continue to put pressure on EPA to keep it from acting capriciously, and from disregarding the economic disaster it can bring through its mandates. Hopeful ly, EPA will continue to sober up and realize that what we need is a balanced policy between the considerations of producing food and protecting he environment. After all,

Uncle Charlie spent most of his life keeping busy. "Work never hurt anybody," he said. "I can't do like I used to, but I make it all right." As a younger man he worked in a mill-stream gin. This was relatively easy compared to the job he did later in life. For years, he went around for miles in the Elba area extracting turpentine from pine trees and carried it by hand back to a mill to be processed. Up until several years ago he did some farming and he had a garden. Although Uncle Charlie didn't have any children of his own, he considered the people in the town of Elba his children. He talked about people like Bill McCollough, a local merchant from whom he bought his groceries, as one of his boys. Judge English and his sons were boys to Uncle Charlie also.

"They come to see me sometime," Charlie said, 'and I'm always glad to see them. I consider all the folks around here, white and colored, my kids, but I have been around white folks most of my life."

This is very important because an irrigation system is bought to last a long time. I would not want Coffee County farmers to buy inferieor equipm and be disappointed in it. My advice would be for prospective irrigation equipment buy ers to shop around carefully and make certain they are dealing with reputable firms. We have a few irrigation units already in use in the county. I hope that we will have adequate rainfall where we won't need them. However, when we face reality, we know that we will have some very dry periods in the years ahead
